Maya woke up early on Saturday. The sky was soft and pink. She put on her boots and walked to the small garden behind her house. Tiny green shoots had pushed through the brown soil overnight. Maya knelt down and gently watered each one. She remembered that her grandfather had told her plants need three things: sunlight, water, and patience. Maya smiled. Patience was the hardest part — but the most important.

1. What day of the week is it in the story?

2. What three things did Maya's grandfather say plants need?
